Remarks

The elevator operator at 291 Fifth Avenue from 1912 to 1917, Hodge Kirnon contributed to the special issue of Camera Work devoted to the question "What Is 291?" He wrote: "It would be sheer impertinence to encourage the idea that words are efficient to convey all that I gleaned from '291.' I well remember how baffled and perplexed I became when I first saw the exhibitions there. I would see nothing inviting or attractive in paintings so devoid of 'beauty,' yet judging from the conversations and controversies which were hourly occurrences, I grew convinced that '291' had a potent meaning and a mission which I did not comprehend. . . . I have found in '291' a spirit which fosters liberty, defines no methods, never pretends to know, never condemns, but always encourages those who are daring enough to be intrepid; those who feel a just repugnance towards the ideals and standards established by conventionalism" (Camera Work 47 [July 1914], 16).

"Did I tell you I made a wonderful portrait of Hodge—a new one—& a wonder of Zoler—two of the finest things I've done—" Stieglitz to Marie Rapp, 23 July 1917 (YCAL).
