

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

Washington, D. C.

FEBRUARY 14, 1942

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

An important collection of French 19th century paintings from the Louvre and other French Museums, as well as from private collections, has arrived at the National Gallery of Art on loan and will shortly be placed on exhibition.

These paintings came to Washington direct from San Francisco where they have been on exhibition at the de Young Memorial Museum. They have also been exhibited at the Art Institute of Chicago and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, after a tour of South America which began at Buenos Aires shortly before the war started.

The paintings were selected from various French Museums and private collections by M. René Huyghe, Curator of Paintings at the Musée du Louvre; and when seen at the National Gallery with the paintings from the Chester Dale Collection and the Whittemore Collection, now on view, will illustrate in a unique way the most brilliant period of French painting.

Photographs of certain paintings will be available if requested.
