NATIONAL GALLERY APPOINTS NEW ADMINISTRATOR

WASHINGTON - Anne Borden Evans has been appointed administrator of the National Gallery of Art. She succeeds Joseph English who retired from the post in October.

Ms. Evans comes to the National Gallery from the MAC Group, where she served as vice president, specializing in management of organizations undergoing major change, with an emphasis on financial services and high-technology industries. Prior to joining the MAC Group, Ms. Evans was involved in new business development at WNET/13 and previously served as news service director in the division of performing arts at the Smithsonian Institution.

J. Carter Brown, director of the National Gallery of Art, said: "We are very enthusiastic about having Ms. Evans with us. Her knowledge of the Gallery, coupled with her record of service to other organizations, will be highly valuable to this institution."

Ms. Evans graduated with honors from Wellesley college and received a masters degree in public and private management at the Yale School of Management. She currently resides in Great Falls, Virginia.
